

DENTAL PROFI

Preoperative Recommendations

Dear patient!

These recommendations are aimed at speeding up the healing and relieving the postoperative period. Their observance will help you to tolerate surgical treatment more easily

- Meal and sleep on the before the treatment

Make sure you eat before visiting a dentist on the appointed day. The food should be nutritious. On the eve of surgery, a healthy sleep of at least 8 hours is recommended for the full functioning of the immune system

- Usual medications administration on the eve of the treatment

The information on all the medications taken regularly should be reported to the doctor in advance. Some groups of drugs may have a cross-interaction with the drugs that will be prescribed to you in the postoperative period, as well as cause undesirable effects for the wound healing

- Medical tests

The results of the recommended medical tests are taken into account when developing a general treatment plan, choosing surgical procedures, and in the surgery planning, if necessary. It is required to comply with all the rules for the prescribed tests delivery for accurate and correct interpretation of their results

- General health in the preoperative period

Be sure to inform the physician or clinic administrator about any changes in your health status before the treatment, for example, a viral infection (herpetic or other), colds, and exacerbation of chronic diseases
